SIDE DRESSING PAYS

Every stalk of cotton grown in South Carolina last year could and would have taken on more bolls than it did if it had been properly side-dressed. You will not see the long skips between side-dressed cotton that you see in other cotton, and you will see more bolls to the stalk.

Every stalk of cotton grown in South Carolina last year would have "shed" less if it had been properly side-dressed. The reason cotton sheds is that it is deficient in plant food. The only way to supply this plant food is to side-dress your cotton. You can't pump it into it. A young, tender, growing child should be fed frequently to make it grow remidly and develop and some into its own and its few and its rapidly and develop and come into its own, and it is the same way with young, tender, growing plants; they should be fed (side-dressed) frequently. You don't expect to feed your mule enough in April to last until October, and the plant food you supply your crop with in April will not last till October, either. When the plant exhausts your cotton sheds.

You can only make one cotton crop a year; that is your money crop. You want to make all the cotton you can. You want to make all the money you can. For every dollar you pay out for fertilizer for side-dressing you get back from three to five dollars. This man Rodgers in Florence county, who fertilized every time he cultivated his crop, made 880 pounds of lint cotton to the acre-lint cotton-not seed cotton-lint

By side-dressing early your cotton grows off early and gets its maturity early and opens early, for when cotton gets its growth and maturity and ripens it is going to open. Your early cotton weighs better than late cotton. It takes about 120 bolls of cotton picked in September and October to make a pound. It takes from 300 to 400 bolls that are picked in the last half of November and later to make a pound.

When the boll weevil strikes a country the early cotton is all the farmer gets. The boll wevil gets the balance. You don't know when the boll weevil will strike you, nor I don't.

Experienced ginners say that 1,300 pounds of side-dressed cotton will make as heavy a bale as 1,500 pounds that has not been side-dressed. The lint is better developed and there is more of it. Suppose side-dressextra bolls to the stalk. The right kind properly applied and make every boll heavier. It will add three least 12,000 stalks to the acre; bolls to make a pound, you bolls, to say nothing of
